PROJECT 4.2: LOGO | MANIFESTO | MONTAGE

CONTEXT

Our RDF focused on transforming the Industrial park to a economic engine that generates Jobs for the locals and it becomes a major potato supplier for the local businesses the the big mall. SO our RDF allows broader farmers to produce for Kwaggafontein since Kwaggafontein doesn't have a lot of farmers that contribute to large scale farming

SUMMIT Potato Processor

1. Symbol of Excellence and Achievement

The word Summit literally means “the highest point” — like the peak of a mountain.

Naming my factory Summit Potato Processors suggests that the company is at the top of its field, producing premium-quality potatoes and products.

It communicates ambition, precision, and leadership — the best of the best.

2. Natural and Earthy Association

“Summit” evokes mountains, nature, and purity, which aligns beautifully with potatoes — a natural, earth-grown product.

It subtly implies that the potatoes are grown or sourced from high, fertile regions (even if metaphorical), giving a sense of freshness and wholesomeness.

3. Strong, Memorable Brand Identity

The word is short, easy to say and remember, and visually strong — perfect for a logo or packaging.

It carries positive energy — powerful, upward, and inspiring — making it stand out in the agricultural and food industry.

It can also extend easily to future products (e.g., Summit Chips, Summit Fries, Summit Foods).

4. Professional and Scalable Tone

It feels corporate and trustworthy, which is ideal for business-to-business partnerships (like supermarkets, export clients, or restaurants).

“Summit” positions the company as a serious player — not just a local farmer, but a professional processor with ambition and reach.

RESEARCH & INSPIRATION

Examples Of Logos In A Similar Field (what works, what doesn't)
What Doesn't Works

Ambiguity of "Solan": The name "Solan" is ambiguous and doesn't inherently connect to potatoes. It could be a person's name, a place, or a scientific term (like "Solanum," the potato genus). Without prior knowledge, a customer has no way of knowing that "Solan" is the core brand for a potato-based business, which creates a disconnect between the name and the product.

The Meaningless Name: "ellips" is problematic because it appears to be a misspelling or an unnecessary truncation of the word "ellipse" (a geometric shape) or perhaps even "eclipse." This creates immediate confusion. A customer won't know what it means, how to pronounce it, or why it's relevant to produce. It lacks any inherent connection to fresh, healthy, or natural foods, making the brand name feel arbitrary and hard to remember.

While "ORGANIC FARM" clearly states the business type and its organic certification, it doesn't specify how the customer interacts with it. Are they a farm stand selling directly to the public? A subscription-based CSA (Community Supported Agriculture)? A wholesaler selling to restaurants? Clarifying this (e.g., "ORGANIC FARM STAND," "FARM & MARKET," "CSA") would immediately tell customers how they can access the products.

What Works

Absolute Clarity and Focus through Repetition:
The repetitive, stacked use of the word "GRAIN" creates a powerful and immediate association. There is no ambiguity. The product or brand category is communicated instantly and memorably. This repetition acts as a visual mantra, hammering home the core focus and making the brand name impossible to forget.

And the logo of the Grain makes it clear what this logo is trying to communicate. If a viewer looks at this logo, at first glance it will be clear what the company is about

Strong Visual Connection to the Product (Avocado Theme)

The “O” is cleverly designed as an avocado shape with a smiley face as the seed, immediately hinting at the product or theme related to avocados or freshness.

The little leaf on top reinforces the idea of something natural, organic, or healthy, which makes the logo instantly relatable to food, wellness, or eco-friendly products.

Cohesive Color and Simplicity

The green-on-dark background palette clearly aligns with the natural/avocado identity, symbolizing health, nature, and freshness.

The design is simple and memorable, ensuring it's easy to recognize and reproduce across packaging, signage, or digital use.

CONCEPT ANALYSIS

Initial stages of my logo designs. In these logos i tried to fit in everything about the name of the building and what it means. These logos where to literal, they can't be picture on clothing or the building's packaging. This logos are a bit too playful.

This is how the intial logos look when they are rendered with the earthy tones that ground the brand in authenticity and honoring its farming roots

The potato cut slices represent the "M's" the inside and the outside of the potato represent the two M's

This is a clear representation of of the layered M's with the colours showing where are the M's

This is a clear separation of the M's with the colour to show that the slices were chosen precisely to match the M form

DESIGN DIRECTION

I designed these logos to reflect the balance between nature and industry, with the potato as both heritage and product. The bold “M” forms a stylised potato slice, symbolising the heart of our process and product . Its layered design reflects transformation—raw harvest becoming refined produce. I chose earthy tones to ground the brand in authenticity and honor its farming roots. Geometric clarity ensures the identity works across packaging, signage, and digital media. I believe simplicity creates recognition, making the mark timeless and memorable. Each design unites place, product, and process into one clear and purposeful symbol.
