

MANIFESTO

This project transforms an apartheid-era factory in Kwaggafontein into a community hub. By preserving the building's scars and adding new workshops and a restaurant, it creates a "Palimpsest of Labour" that uses the painful past to build a future where the community can learn, create, and profit from its own work.

I designed these logos to reflect the balance between nature and industry, with the potato as both heritage and product. The bold "M" forms a stylised potato slice, symbolising the heart of our process and product. Its layered design reflects transformation—raw harvest becoming refined produce. I chose earthy tones to ground the brand in authenticity and honor its farming roots. Geometric clarity ensures the identity works across packaging, signage, and digital media. I believe simplicity creates recognition, making the mark timeless and memorable. Each design unites place, product, and process into one clear and purposeful symbol.
